

Markos Troulis teaches “Turkey’s International Relations”, “International Relations Theory and Systemic Geopolitics” and “Geopolitics of Turkey-Caucasus” at the Department of Turkish Studies and Modern Asian Studies of the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens as well as at the National Security School of Greece. He graduated the London School of Economics (MSc) and then he continued towards a PhD title by the University of Piraeus (Greece) with the subject of Turkish Foreign Policy in the Caucasus and Central Asia, while he completed two postdoctoral researches in the University of Piraeus and University of Macedonia emphasizing on Turkish-American Relations. He has worked as a Research Fellow for Begin-Sadat Center for Strategic Studies (BESA Center) of the Israeli Bar-Ilan University and during the last years he has been a member of the Laboratory for Geo-Cultural Analyses of the Wider Middle East and Turkey of the University of Athens. He is an author of papers published in Greek and foreign scientific journals, as well as of the books:

Troulis, M. I. (2021) Turkish Strategy in the Caucasus and Central Asia [in Greek]. Athens: Piotita.

Mazis, I. Th., Troulis, M. and Domatioti, X. (2021) Structural Realism and Systemic Geopolitical Analysis: Convergences and Divergences. New York: Nova.

Mazis, I. Th. and Troulis, M. I. (2020) Turkish Strategy in Libya [in Greek]. Athens: Leimon.

Troulis, M. I. (2020) On Turkey [in Greek]. Athens: Infognomon.

Troulis, M. I. (2019) U.S.-Turkey relations [in Greek]. Athens: Leimon.

Mazis, I. Th., Troulis, M. and Domatioti, X. (2019) Structural Realism and Systemic Geopolitical Analysis: Convergences and Divergences [in Greek]. Athens: Leimon.